CALVIN COLLEGE

GRAND RAPIDS , MICHIGAN

A train leaves from California, from New Jersey a car, from Florida a plane . . . On them are those who in a yearly ritual seek a place in a city in the north. Those who for the first time make the journey confer in uncertain phrases about "There". Those who have gone before are easy in their talk of going back. Shaping their expectations with the memories of a year just lived they go "There" to make a beginning in the ending of the year.

Now I had to make a transition from an abstract description of Calvin College to a consideration of the student body. I turned to my notes—"Five extractable phrases to preface the sections of the book."—Five categories, the whole college, cut, dried, and placed in picas . . .

Though their ambitions differ and their commitments vary in strength and object nevertheless they form a student body.

Sensing the inadequacy of what I had written I continued—

Because they are alive they want to communicate, to identify. Having no hope of knowing everyone, they divide themselves into groups to know some better.

I looked back at my notes. From "groups" I had to proceed to "cliques".

But the need for a more satisfying communication results in the selection of three, or perhaps four who receive a special attention. With them are shared quiet and happy, sad and boisterous moments.

The notes demanded a consideration of the relationships formed between two people. Friendships defined in twenty-five words or less. Prizes will be awarded . . .

They join in doing work; common tasks introduce the abilities of one to another. Enjoyment shared brings appreciation and sometimes appreciation becomes love.

Desiring to be finished I followed the notes to "individuals".

And quietly comes a new realization of the complexity, before unscen, of themselves the individuals.

It was incomplete and I knew. The five paragraphs could not tell of anticipation and reward, of failure and effort. Only the usual was there and the commonplace. With a sigh I sent the copy to the editor.

To be more than mere ingesters of academic rehash is demanded of us. Responsibility confronts us in our relations to the college and each other; our circumstances and desires require a new maturity. And whether it is in the disorder of a crowd or in the solace of a quiet time, we find that in satisfying the demands of our position we have gained a new and full dimension.

SEMINARY

Father,
Let this place be an altar
Where we offer ourselves
In thy Word's service to man—
In obedience to thy command
And to thy glory. Amen.

Because theology is human effort to think after God His thoughts,
It is a ring in which new thoughts often clash with old.
The theology student rethinks the old and examines the new
Trying to make Truth his own—
Only to find that Truth is never possessed—but possesses.

With God's message, the seminary student
 Prepares himself for the people he must meet.
 "It is my purpose," he says.
 But that is not true until he finds it is God's purpose with him.
